We analyzed the clonality of CD8+ T cells in tumors from 3 patients who were successfully treated with 5-fluorouracil (5-FU) as first-line treatment for colorectal cancer and investigated the cause of the preferential accumulation of CD8+ T cells in this setting. Clonality analysis of intratumoral T-cell receptor (TCR) sequences from colorectal cancer using laser-captured microdissection and single-strand conformation polymorphism analysis showed that all 3 samples had a unique dominant TCR repertoire. CD8+ T-cell enrichment was not associated with T-cell clones that were reactive against tumor antigens. Sequences of dominant T-cell clones were not associated with mutations of the TCR alpha or beta chain. TCR repertoire analysis revealed no clones related to T-cell clones specific for several tumor antigens, including MART1, tyrosinase, and tyrosinase-related proteins. Together, these results demonstrated that CD8+ T cells were specifically enriched within tumors from patients treated with 5-FU, possibly due to rapid expansion of CD8+ T-cell clones that recognize tumor antigens cross-presented on antigen-presenting cells. This finding suggests that both lymphocyte-intrinsic and extrinsic factors are important for efficient CD8+ T-cell accumulation within tumors from patients who have received systemic immunotherapy for colorectal cancer.
