When I start Cluster Node Service on a T2050 (or any PowerEdge), the service is delayed by about 30 seconds. A'messy' part of the delay is that the service completes successfully and then stops -- on the other hand, the error message looks like it's really occurring. Here's what you can see for any cluster node: When I look at the event log for events in the Cluster Service, I get a mix of success and failures, including this one: The PowerShell command I use to start the service is simple: Start-Service -Name CnstrServ Yet, on my other servers, it's very quick and reliable. What's going on? How can I get the service to start immediately? A: The issue was the RAID controller -- it was having a problem responding to my SQL Server. I solved it by un-plugging it and plugging it back in. -over I have nothing negative to say about this game. But my girlfriend says I have something negative to say about this game. She's right.
