Synchronize is an application that synchronizes remote or local folders. Synchronizing folders is an alternative to copying or moving, since the synchronization process is done at the file system level and it has no impact on the original files. Through the Synchronize wizard, you can select a source folder and a destination folder, and then the application will synchronize both of them, the source folder through the local folder and the destination folder through the remote folder. The source folder and the destination folder can be the same folder or different folders. Synchronize works through the standard FTP and SFTP protocols. It works on Mac OS X and Windows XP or higher.

A shell notification area icon will be created. Synchronize is an open-source project. You can find source code on the github repository at: References

I normally don't write about pending legislation, but after doing this, I'm convinced that there should be a bipartisan attempt to end the federal takeover of education in the United States. Both parties should want to end the takeover. Democrats should because they want to preserve federal power, Republicans should because they want to preserve liberty, and of course it would be good for all of us to fight the federal government for control of education. Despite the obvious problems caused by the takeover and the lack of success, the federal government persists in the folly of the "Race to the Top" program. It's a program designed by ideologues from both parties, implemented by ideologues from both parties, and sold as an "educational reform." One key reason to seek an end to the federal takeover of education is because the federal takeover of education always has a powerful effect on states' rights, the traditional way to share power. If the federal government establishes standards and schools are subject to federal enforcement, the states are deprived of the ability to enforce their own laws, or to take other actions in education (such as school choice). Some states are trying to get a waiver to stay in the Race to the Top program. But the outcome is not yet clear.

Other states, including Washington, are contemplating taking more of the federal money by ceasing to participate in the Race to the Top program. In every state that has done this, however,
