Joe Biden told his fans at a fundraiser that he plans to take the billionaire class to the woodshed over their "destroying" our working class. Biden told his Democrat base that he plans to kick the billionaires—and their wealth accumulation, waging a so-called war against their minds and expanding their businesses to become the largest family in America. In remarks prepared for this weekend's fundraiser, Biden wrote that after a long career on Capitol Hill, "I've come to realize that the biggest threat to our future isn't foreign competition or over-capacity at home. It's the family that's alive and well, and growing stronger every day." Biden argued that some families have "not only become richer, they've actually expanded their businesses. The wealthiest of the wealthiest of those families have grown their wealth so much that they're now, with their vast wealth and interests, influencing our politics, our policy, even our government." Biden's comments echo his remarks two weeks ago in a speech on economic policy in New York. "More family wealth means more political influence, so it's time for us to hit them where it hurts: in their pockets." Biden said. Although Biden had a good laugh about it and said that this is something he's taken personally, the "suggestion" was met with some uncomfortable silence, especially from the younger wing of the party.
