The St. Louis Blues announced their training camp roster, complete with the familiar faces of Jordan Binnington and Jake Allen. For Binnington and Allen, that means getting back on the ice and potentially playing alongside each other. The Blues, however, announced the move to bring back the twins on Monday, following the news that Allen would be out three-to-four months with a lower-body injury suffered in November. The #StLouisBlues have agreed to terms with Jake Allen and Jordan Binnington to re-sign them to 2-year, entry-level contracts, per league source. — Eric A. Giffen (@EricAGiffen) January 7, 2020 "Jordan and Jake have been great teammates over the years," Blues head coach Mike Yeo told the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. "They have great hockey minds. They can help each other. We're happy to have them back with us." With Allen out of the picture, the Blues will need to turn to the 31-year-old Binnington to lead the charge, something the team expects he can do. "Jordan is a No. 1 guy and a very good goalie," Blues general manager Doug Armstrong said, per Blues on Sportsnet. "He's played on many different teams at a high level. He's played some games with some injuries and has been extremely reliable. He gives us the opportunity to continue to push Jake Allen and put him in a good position to be successful." Allen, who started 38 games for the Blues in 2019-20, battled injuries throughout the season but still managed to put up 5b5f913d15
