It is well known that nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs (NSAIDs) have mild to severe gastrointestinal (GI) adverse effects. These include nausea, gastritis, and dyspepsia. A recent meta-analysis demonstrated that women who took NSAIDs had a 1.5-fold increased risk of endometrial cancer, and that the risk was greatest with the drugs that were second in line to nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs. Pregnant women should avoid taking NSAIDs, and patients should be warned about the potential risk of developing endometrial cancer. Although nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drugs may be useful to relieve pain and inflammation associated with rheumatic disorders, osteoarthritis, and other conditions, the GI adverse effects such as gastritis and dyspepsia limit their use. Even if the GI adverse effects are mild, patients should be counseled to take them at the lowest possible dose to reduce the risk of GI bleeding. 3da54e8ca3
