Every type of cat owner can appreciate this game's fun set pieces and go-for-broke point system, while young players love its simple rules and addictively high score potential. Each game of Cats & Dogs is a random match-up of three cats and three dogs. The feline team receives 45 total points (5 for each cat), while the canine team scores for pouncing (4 points each) and stealing the ball (1 point each). Players can bid for possession of the ball, as in basketball. The feline team wins as soon as one of their pets captures the ball – in other words, at any time during the dog's possession. But the game is worth three points, even if the feline team fails to win by that score. Game-Ending Tiebreaker: If there is a tie at the end of the game, the tiebreaker happens in three rounds. In Round 1, the cats and dogs switch sides. In Round 2, the teams switch positions, and in Round 3, the categories are reversed (point total becomes category difference). 2. Players: There are 4 players to a game. The players keep score independently of each other. 3. Time: Players can take as much time as they need. Each game is one turn, and 60 seconds can be used for just about any turn. 4. The Rules: The player must choose the animals for the game at the beginning of a game; it cannot be changed.

The Internet is a network of computers, the world's equivalent of a railroad system, which is operated by big companies like Google, Facebook and Yahoo. People, from all over the world, use the Internet to communicate with each other and a large part of the economy is operated through the Internet - from the small businesses that sell cookies through to the biggest corporations that operate complex operations. In the day to day operation of the Internet, the people who operate the computers, the networks, and the equipment that enables everyone to communicate, share data and communicate, never see each other, they never talk to each other, but they do it all, enabling the Internet to remain the most advanced and most powerful information technology network in the world. What happens when you steal the Internet? No one steals the Internet. The Internet is an incredible thing that can only ever remain free if it remains open, free and a wild and unregulated thing. If it remains open, free and a wild and unregulated thing, everyone can use it to do whatever they want and to say what they want, and never be forced to pay for it, even if they are only using the Internet to laugh at the lame jokes posted on the Tumblr account of their ex-boyfriend/girlfriend, or to read a few naughty pictures, they are not paying for that. The problem comes when you decide you can be as free as you want on the 3e33713323
