As Asia's premier financial gateway, Hong Kong often provides easy transportation, competitive wage rates, and a reliable legal system for conducting business. More than 100 international business laws are "made in Hong Kong" and the city's competitive trading environment is readily available to global businesses. As a result, many U.S. companies already have a presence in Hong Kong. China's Economic Boom Begins to Heat the Middle Kingdom The China boom continues to be a game changer in the global economic environment. Just one year ago the "global economic outlook was grim: the IMF reported that the world economy was in a severe recession. But now, according to the IMF, the global economy has returned to positive growth, gaining momentum "in 2011 and to date, although emerging markets are still grappling with a faster growth and a higher inflation rate. The Chinese economy is at the center of this change." In 2010, according to the IMF, "China's economy grew by 8.9%, the largest rate of any economy in the world." Hong Kong Became a World Trade City and New Central for International Business Hong Kong's GDP is estimated to be approximately $1.5 trillion, with 20 percent of the global offshore financial services industry. The city has been a popular location for foreign investment since the British colony was established in 1842. As a business hub, Hong Kong has become one of the world's top investment locations since 2004. The Hong Kong Monetary Authority reported that Hong Kong has become the gateway to international investment for about 60 other countries. Foreign business activity has almost tripled since 2003, reaching nearly $5 billion. The number of international companies in Hong Kong has also increased. From 2004 to 2007, the number of foreign firms increased by approximately one-third, but over the last two years, investment continues to grow by about 10 percent annually. During the first quarter of 2008, Hong Kong
