Now I want to add a second action. I'm seeing this: The "New Query" action is missing. The "New Query" action appears on the ribbon when you create a new query from the list view. It is not on the list query form. Does anyone know how to add this action? A: It's because your list is using a view. If you add a list view, then it will show up on the form. In an electronic controller, sensors are used to measure values, such as pressure, of the various working fluids that are in the system. This is done by coupling various sensors to a fluid, such as a pressurized hydraulic fluid, via a sensor connection, to thereby couple the sensor to the fluid. Sensors may be located at various locations within the fluid system, and it is necessary to electronically connect the sensors to a controller. The electronically connecting the sensors to the controller is typically done by either using a cable, or by using an electronic communicant, such as a coupler that sends and receives electrical signals via electrical wires. Electronic couplers are often used to couple signals between the sensors and a controller. Electronic couplers may be used to provide the wiring of the sensor connection in a system. Electronic couplers may also be used to contain the wiring of the sensor connection in a system. For example, the wiring of the sensor connection in a hydraulic circuit may be directly contained in an electronic coupler and may be connected to the controller in a plug-in fashion. However, the use of an electronic coupler reduces the physical space needed in a system and reduces the amount of contamination in the fluid that can affect the sensing of a sensor. The use of electronic couplers also allows for sensing of more than one working fluid, which allows for more complicated fluid systems. One type of electronic coupler that may be used for sensing a plurality of working fluids is commonly referred to as

The lecturer hands him a number of trials and asks him to determine the number of successes. The student believes he realizes that the number of successes at any one trial is independent of the number of successes at any other trial. In fact, the lecturer secretly places an object on all but one of the trials. If the student records the number of successes on each trial, what is the probability that the number of successes recorded on the last trial is greater than the number of successes recorded on the first trial? I'm going through a book to refresh my mathematical knowledge and I find this question on page 118 of the book. I don't understand what the lecturer is thinking in this question because I thought that he/she doesn't know where the objects are placed so the student can't know the number of successes at any trial. This is my view that there must be an other explanation to this question. My classmate thinks that the lecturer will make sure the student cannot use the trials and objects by making the number of successes independent from the others. Is my view right? Can anyone help me with this question? Many thanks. A: I think it is more likely that the lecturer will have thought that the object has been put on the first trial, so the student can then base a calculation on the first trial being d0c515b9f4
