Adjusting color with Adjustment Layers Adjustment Layers are great for quickly adjusting color and saturating or desaturating a color in an image. To create an Adjustment Layer, go to the Layers palette, click the New Adjustment Layer button (it's the one with the paintbrush icon), and then select Color Balance in the Adjustments panel. The Adjustments panel opens, displaying the Color Balance dialog box (shown in Figure 7-11. The dialog box explains how to create a color adjustment layer and gives you a preview of the color adjustment you are about to make."). For more advanced color tweaks, see the next section. Figure 7-11. After you create an Adjustment Layer, use the Adjustments panel to adjust color in your image. In this example, you see that the photo I took (a composite of red, green, and blue lasers) has red and blue mixed in the top part of the photo to create a pink tinge. The dialog box in the figure explains how to create a color adjustment layer and gives you a preview of the color adjustment you are about to make.

Q: Where's the best place to distribute source code for a PL/SQL package? I have a package that is getting out of date and I'd like to update it. Normally, this would be done by copying the source code of the package into my project and recompiling. However, this project is a client/server application that is developed by a third party, who has sole control over the server. I don't really have the right to overwrite the package they developed in the first place. I have searched around to see if there is a way to distribute the code to the server and replace it, but I haven't had much success. I'm not sure what the best option is. I thought maybe Oracle had an official Java-like way to do it using JavaRDD, but I can't find it. A: You can use the spfile approach. Create an empty file the same name as the package in the same folder and add to it the contents of the package code (using the LOAD command). As the file is stored in the same folder, the code will be available to the session and user the same way as if the file was located in another folder. This technique is used with Oracle 11g and onwards: As stated in the documentation, it requires read/write access to the spfile.
